Report of the Board of Directors.

The idea of caring for homeless children individually, by distributing them into separate family homes, rather than by congregating them in institutions, as advanced in this State by the Children's Aid Society of Pennsylvania twenty-one years ago, and as was being worked out at that time in a different way by two other societies in two other States, is now clearly in the foreground of modern thought on the treatment of dependent children.

At the twenty-sixth session of the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, held in Cincinnati in 1899, the Committee on the Care of Destitute and Neglected Children reported their conclusion in these words: "All workers agree that the home is the natural place to develop the child."

Mr. C. R. Henderson, Professor of Sociology in the University of Chicago, says of this report, in his recent book on "The Dependent, Defective and Delinquent Classes": "This pregnant sentence may be regarded as the monument of an epoch-making decision in the history of charitable methods; and it will become a regulative principle which must gradually transform the means and agencies of many societies, as its significance comes to be generally understood."

The Outlook of June 14, 1902, in commenting on the last session of the National Conference of Charities and Corrections, held this year in New York, says: "A significant feature of modern charity is the reaction it illustrates against institutionalism and the emphasis it places upon individual treatment. Equally characteristic is the accent it places upon home life."

John Withington Ames, in describing in The Boston Transcript of January 4, 1902, a recent change in the methods of the Children's Friend Society of that city, alludes to the abandoned policy of detaining dependent children in an institution before placing them out in private families, and says that after sixty-eight years' institutional service this society will proceed anew on its career, caring for more children than ever, but doing it by having private homes always ready, so that no waif need wait before being taken directly into a family from the hands of the agent, adding that henceforth "private homes is the goal."

The Philadelphia Record, in writing of the last National Prison Conference held in Philadelphia, September, 1902, says that the finest thing done was the adoption by that association of the doctrine of no prison life for children. And continues: "The principle that any home which is not distinctly bad is better than the best public institution for children is sure to be more widely adopted with increased experience. . . . Even where the influence is as good as it is possible to maintain in a public institution, there is lack of the wholesome and grateful atmosphere of a good private home."

Honorable Thomas G. Hayes, Mayor of Baltimore, in an extract from a recent message of his, published in the National Bulletin of Charities and Corrections of February 28, 1902, says: "The high death-rate of foundlings during the year in the three institutions long used by the city for such children has led the Supervisors to suggest to those institutions that the foundlings who are city charges might, as many as possible, be boarded with carefully chosen women, so as to secure for them the individual treatment which they need. . . . In such ways as these the Supervisors, with due regard to previously existing conditions, are trying, step by step, to improve the methods and means of caring for those who must be accepted by them as city charges."

Mr. Homer Folks, Commissioner of Charities of New York City, in an address last summer before a Summer School of that city, explaining the conditions of the child that should be considered in its bringing up—the physical, mental, and the economic, says that all these conditions are best served by life outside an institution for young children, and adds: "I hope that in a few years we wont think of sending young children anywhere save to private families."

The Jewish Chatauqua Society, at its last annual convention at Atlantic City, 1902, recommends the "earnest consideration of means for boarding out destitute, dependent, and delinquent children."

The Church Standard of January 17, 1903, reports that Mr. Jacob A. Riis, in his opening lecture of a course of four lectures on the general subject of "The Peril and Preservation of the Home," delivered in Holy Trinity Church on January 6, 1903, "praised the Children's Aid Society of Philadelphia for its pioneer work in rescuing homeless children from the barracks called institutions, and placing them in individual homes. This was a great and far-reaching reform, and New York and Boston have followed Philadelphia's example. The result in New York was that, whereas in the year before the Children's Aid Society's plan was adopted, hardly one foundling in a hundred had survived in the barracks; the death-rate fell to fifty per cent. in the first year of the change, thirty per cent. in the second year, and a trifle over ten per cent. in the fourth year; this is lower than the average foundling death-rate throughout the country. Every baby is entitled to one pair of mother's arms around its neck, and without this communities will simply wipe themselves out."

Miss Richmond, General Secretary of the Society for Organizing Charity of Philadelphia, says: "The only test of true charity work is its effort to help the poor to build up a strong family life."

A recent letter to the Children's Aid Society from Edinburg, Scotland, asks for such information as we can give of the methods of our work, as the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, there, is "very, very keen upon the inauguration of the family plan of caring for dependent children."

This unmistakable evidence of a growing confidence in the efficiency of the separate family plan, coming as it does from high authority and from such widely diffused sources, is of vital importance to those who, in their desire to help in the service to children, would add "thought to kindness."

In addition to all the above testimony in favor of the segregation of dependent children, the Children's Aid Society offers again its annual contribution to the cause of child-care as shown in its work in Pennsylvania. This work has always been of a distinctly thoughtful character. The Society claims for its ministration that it is essentially on the side of mercy, and that the entire scheme is rational and economical.

In boarding foundlings and orphaned infants, each in a carefully selected home, the death-rate of the Society's charges is about one per cent., while in large orphan asylums it is reported as anywhere from fifty per cent. up. Epidemics, those fearful scourges of infant life in institutions, are necessarily limited by the family plan.

Young children placed under the care of this Society in a good home, develop naturally under the influence of congenial family life. They gain self-possession and frankness of manner by everyday contact with the people of the neighborhood. They wear clothes selected for them with some regard to personal fitness. They go to the public school, that gift of the State established to prepare the young for citizenship, and the full term of tuition is secured to them. They learn incidentally in a thousand ways the terms and means of getting on in the world, and grow up with the impulse of fitting themselves, in turn, into the social fabric.

The Society claims that by utilizing the machinery of an already existing home, and the beneficent offices of a good home mother rather than building up necessarily expensive establishments for the housing and management of artificial communities, there is saved to charity an enormous outlay; and that by caring for neglected children and wayward youth in judicious family homes, where the scenes of mischief and the temptation to crime are replaced by examples of thrift and industry, the saving to the State is incalculable.

Moreover, the emphasis put upon the value of family life by this use of the family in the care of children is excellent in its reflex influence. It is no uncommon occurrence for indifferent and even cruel parents to learn to respect the personality of their children through the realization of what some other family is doing for them. They hear that their boys and girls are doing well in school, that they are receiving the attention and love of good people, and they begin to look toward remodeling their own lives along similar lines. An instance may well be cited in this connection of a mother who more than a year ago brought her boy to the office charging him with utter incorrigibility, saying that he ran away from home, that his disobedience and bad behavior had so changed their relations that she believed he had no love for her and she had lost all love for him, and added that she never wanted to see him again. After careful investigation the conclusion was reached that it would be well to separate mother and boy for a time. He was placed in a home in the country. The delight of his new life and the interest in his new surroundings soon began their effect. He wrote letters of appreciation of all that was being done for him, began to send expressions of love to his mother, even wrote a notable rhyme, of which we give a copy to show his thought of his mother as well as his caretaker.

TO A MOTHER.

Oh, how I love my mother dear
More and more this very year,
And when to me she was so sad
I now can make her very glad.

TO A CHILD.

How nice it is to have a bed
And a pillow for my head;
And when I nestle down to sleep
The angels round about me creep;
And when I think of the next day
I softly to the Lord doth pray.

Finally, after eighteen months' absence the boy was returned to his mother at her request. The reunion of mother and son seemed complete. The result may be set down as a rehabilitated family; a mother and boy saved to each other and without expense to the State for reformatory measures. The Bureau of Information of this Society helps on an average twenty cases a day in finding ways of fostering the home instinct. Mothers who would board a child away from them are encouraged to take a home with the child through our Department of Domestic Service. Mothers or fathers left alone with families to support and who in the first hour of trouble see no way but to separate themselves from their children, are continually helped by advice and information as to ways and means of reorganizing their broken family. Nothing but the child's peril to his moral or physical being should be considered of sufficient reason to help in separating him from even a remnant of a home. Concrete examples of the far-reaching influence of such work toward the preservation of the home would crowd the pages of this small report. We can only say, it is impossible to estimate the value of the personal service involving often many days of investigation and study, which is given freely from our office to every case where the interests of a child and a home are at stake.

As soon as it is made clear through expert investigation that a child should be removed from its surroundings and there is no suitable person to look to for help in its care, the child is made a ward of the Society. It is placed without delay in a home to board. The Committee on Cases and Visitation, with the advice of the Superintendent, then begin their supervision of the home through their visitors who are employed for the sole purpose of learning the status of each child in its home, and of seeing that the "Instructions to the Caretaker" are scrupulously adhered to. These instructions cover many important subjects on the care and treatment of children, with the concluding clause that "if these instructions are not carried out faithfully to the letter we shall consider that the agreement with this Society is broken and the Society is therefore released from its obligations." Careless home-placing, insufficient supervision, or the misuse of a good home, such as putting more than one child (except in rare cases) in charge of the home mother, shows either serious misconception of the true family plan or wanton indifference to the care of the child. This Society is glad to point to its methods and records as showing the high standard of its work.

The application of the home principle to young law breakers is of especial interest to the public this year through the accumulation of cases of that class committed to the Society by the Juvenile Court. Since June 14, 1901, on which date the Juvenile Court Act went into effect, the Society has received by commitment from the Judges 161 children. These children were received under the following charges: Burglary 3, larceny 28, till-tapping 1, malicious mischief 2, vagrancy 4, assault and battery 2, incorrigible 34, runaway 6, abandoned 3, delinquency 1, homeless child 1, neglected 76—total 161. They were all placed immediately, with one exception, in separate homes in the country, put into school and were made subject to the rules of the Society. One hundred and forty-nine of these have responded to our methods and are doing well; 2 are still on trial with but slight improvement; 3 were returned to parents by order of the Court; 7 failed to be benefited. Three of these 7 were returned to Court and committed to the House of Refuge on our advice, and 4 ran away from their homes. It is fair to state that these 7 who are set down as failures were, with one exception, beyond the age when we unhesitatingly advise the mild measures of the home. The 3 boys whom our caretakers despaired of and who were committed to the House of Refuge were 15, 14, and 13 years old, untruthful and repeatedly dishonest.

The 4 who ran away from our care were 3 boys aged 16, 15, and 13 years, and 1 little girl aged 11 years. The boy of 16 is now with an aunt and works in a brickyard. The little girl ran home to her mother who has moved to New York. The 2 boys 15 and 13 years we have not been able to trace to date.

The 3 "burglars" in our care, whose average age is 11, are doing well. One of them "likes to go to school but not to church."

Twenty-two cases for larceny ranging in age from 14 to 8 years, average time with us 9.1 months, are reported doing "well" and "splendidly." One boy 10 years old had been arrested for stealing and put under care of a Probation Officer; was rearrested for same crime and committed to the Children's Aid Society. He could not read or write and did not attend school. After two months in the country under our supervision his caretaker said he was a good, obedient boy. He attended school regularly. Later, when our visitor called, he was in the orchard picking apples. He said he had a fine home and all the apples he could eat "without paying for them," and added "we have a lot of chickens and pigs."

The little boy arrested for till-tapping has a dissipated father and is doing well in the country.

The 6 "runaways," average age 12.1 years, have all done well in their respective homes.

One of the boys indicted for malicious mischief, 9 years old, was with us 14 months; visited 5 times; improved and returned to father.

Another for the same offence—11 years old, mother dead, father drinks, with us 7 months—is happy in his country home. The assault and battery cases, 12 and 13 years of age, have been with us 2 and 3 months. Caretakers to date report satisfactory progress.

The cases of vagrancy, average age 12.1 years, have all been in care one year. Two are doing well at home and at school. One not improving so rapidly.

The reports from “neglected,” “homeless,” “delinquent,” and “incorrigible” children are almost monotonously favorable, showing that a good home with judicious care is all that is necessary to save to the State an enormous proportion of children who are cast adrift by misfortune and crime.

In connection with this work for children committed to our care from the Court, the Society acted for 18 months as House of Detention and supported during most of that time 3 Probation Officers. Without this aid from our Society, it can be asserted that the work of the Court would have been seriously hampered. The Society received and cared for 795 children held for trial under bail.* All these cases were investigated and reports made to the Court of the circumstances attending each case. Eleven hundred and six visits were made to 375 children on probation. This work was done in addition to the other work of the Society in caring for its large number of children in its family homes, and was a severe drain on the treasury.

We close this year with a deficit of $2612.97. Constantly increasing demands for usefulness stare us in the face. The need of such a Society being placed upon a firm and constant basis of support grows more and more insistent. Again we ask the State to see to it that a work so beneficent in its purpose, which is not only palliative but preventive, shall not go haltingly forward for want of means.

* The records concerning the 795 children held for trial under bail offer an interesting study into the causes of child-crime, and are now in the hands of a student of sociology.

The Society, during the year 1902, has cared for 1076 children, classified as follows :

Orphans	24
Half-orphans	145
Deserted	29
Of dissolute parents	78
Of parents unmarried	47

We have left in our care at the close of this year 804 children—672 white, 132 colored, which means that an equal number of good fathers and mothers are enlisted to give individual attention to that number of children. We place colored children in the homes of colored people, in order to secure to the children a sense of being part of a real home life. Those children who are in what we call free homes (as are mentioned in the tabulated statement), where no board is being paid at present, are under the same rules of visitation and supervision as those for whom board is paid. The free homes are gained by the ingratiating of the child itself into the household's favor to such an extent that the family becomes a willing worker for the Society.

All children are visited at least twice a year by our agents, and in many cases much oftener. Many interesting incidents are brought back by our visitors when they return from their trips of distribution and inspection. The following are a few examples as they appear on the records :

* These figures include only the children placed in family homes. See Report of Superintendent, page 15, showing a total of 2737 under our care, in different ways during the year.

"A, 11 years of age, arrested twice for larceny; mother states is incorrigible; parents would do nothing for him. Taken by Children's Aid Society; in one month visited. A is very happy in his home. Miss B. says he is very willing to go to school but unwilling to attend church. Visitor talked to A, who said that he loves the country and has such good times that he does not want to return to the city, but would rather stay where he has nice fields to play in, and he loves to help about the farm and bring in the cows."

"C and D, 7 and 10 years old; neglected children; father and mother in House of Correction. While waiting for car to take children to country C asked, 'Will the woman in the country lick me?' Visitor assured her she would be kind to her. Upon placing her with caretaker she appeared fearful, and visitor asked caretaker in her presence if she would be kind to her, who kindly assured her that she would. Visitor asked C if her brother was a good boy. She said 'No.' 'In what way?' 'He laughs out loud,' she replied. 'What else?' visitor asked. 'He runs about,' she said. The caretaker, who has a large farm, said that he could make all the noise he wished and run about also on the farm, as there was lots of room."

"E, 12 years old; arrested for larceny; father's whereabouts unknown; mother works out as a cook; boy neglected, untruthful, and dishonest. E, very troublesome and expelled from school in country. Upon visitor removing him and placing him several miles away from any town, she asked him if he would be lonesome in this new home. Looking at the three family pets—a dog and two cats—he said, 'No, if I can have something to play with,' and upon his caretaker saying that he might take the dog and scare up rabbits, he appeared quite settled and contented in his new home, and visitor believes he will improve there."

"D, 8 years old; received from mother; parents separated; mother cannot control D, who has a bad temper; was always a troublesome boy. When visitor called at a large farmhouse to arrange for him, he exclaimed, 'Oh, I will be so good if I can stay where all these cows are.' When Mr. M. helped him from the carriage and told him he had 38 cows and 10 horses he said, 'Will they be mine if I live with you?' When told 'yes, if he would be a good boy,' he seemed delighted and promised to be good."

Twenty-three hundred visits have been made to our homes during the year. All this is being done largely by private contribution, which shows the place the Society holds in the confidence of the community. The responsibility, however, of the support of a charity so clearly in the interest of the State ought not to be left to so large an extent to the generosity of a few citizens. We cannot but hope that the present Legislature may put its seal of commendation on our efforts by a greatly increased appropriation.

The Junior Clothing Committee, an active and important branch of the Society, reports that 2501 garments have been cut out during the year, which have been distributed to various societies who have kindly helped the Committee by making them. Seven hundred and fifty Christmas presents have also been wrapped and mailed for as many little wards.

The willingness of the distinguished corps of solicitors and medical specialists to continue their services to our cause is gratefully acknowledged.

We would express our thanks to the railroad authorities who have given transportation to the children at reduced rates, and we are happy to report friendly co-operation with the following organizations: Western Soup Society, Almshouses in City and State, Harrison Day Nursery, Jane D. Kent Day Nursery, Willing Day Nursery, Young Women's Union, the Mary J. Drexel Home, the Philadelphia Protectory House of the Good Shepherd, St. Joseph's Protectory (Norristown, Pa.), Florence Crittenton Home, Door of Hope, Home for Infants, Home Missionary Society, House of the Holy Child, Home of Industry, Home of Our Saviour, Midnight Mission, New Century Club, Philadelphia Society for Organizing Charity, Institution for Training in Speech of Deaf Children, Philadelphia Lying-in Charity, Preston Retreat, County Prison, Salvation Army, Sheltering Arms, Society to Protect Children from Cruelty, St. Michael's and All Angels, Southern Home for Destitute Children, St. Vincent's Home, Wayfarer's Lodge, Western Temporary Home, Women's Christian Association, Women's Directory. The following hospitals, for their aid in the care of the sick: Pennsylvania, University, Philadelphia, Children's, Polyclinic, Jefferson, Women's. To Dr. A. V. Scott Haensler, for the assistance she has given to our Department of Domestic Service.

Our Superintendent, Miss Kerr, and her ever ready assistants have performed a year's heavy work with untiring zeal. Our appreciation of the same is here expressed.
